

40% of all organisms are endangered, according to the International Union for Conservation of Nature. Organizations such as World Wildlife Fund and the US Fish & Wildlife Service as well as many other smaller programs are trying to help save these creatures from extinction through anything from legislation to captive breeding. Like all non-profit organizations, they can use both fiscal and volunteer help. Even simply small environment-saving actions can help—take shorter showers, use less petroleum-based products, plant a tree.